This is a great book! People think this will be an annoying story about a dog. the dogs name is trumpet. If you do read it you might think it is sad or boring about Aunt Golda but it is not. hope you can read it! it's a good one!

Ella is a young girl in 6th grade who spends all her time practicing....practicing singing and piano so that she can one day be famous like her great aunt the opera singer. When her great aunt passes away she is left a dog....a beagle named Trumpet. Every time she tries to practice her singing the dog sings along with her and it aggravates her and her mom very much, but there are some side benefits to having this dog....friends.

Cute. Good book for someone who is beginning chapter books. No hard words that I could see, and a good story about how animals can make a difference, positive training techniques, and making friends. Ella is always playing the piano and practicing, so she doesn't really have friends. When her great aunt dies, she leaves Ella a DOG!!! But Trumpet always sings when Ella does, making it difficult to prepare for the school talent show. However, Trumpet opens the way for Ella to make friends and organize a new song act for the talent show. It's a quick read of an adult, and would be a fun read-together. The setting is 6th grade in an elementary school and in Ella's home.

This is such a cute book. I read this quite some time ago (about 4 years ago), but from what I remember, I really liked it. It was a quick read and very entertaining.

I like the Loudest Beagle on the Block. The main characters are Trumpet. Trumpet is a dog, he has a secret that you need to find out. Every time Ell want to sing or play the piano Ell get interrupted by the dog how will Ell practices for her talent show in 3 weeks.

I came across this book in an unusual way. I'm sure I wouldn't have picked it up otherwise. I'm a huge fan of the singer Sarah Brightman, and did a search for her in the book category of Amazon. There were few results, but I was surprised to find a children's book (this one) that mentioned her several times. This is a very cute little story about a girl named Ella who inherits a music-loving beagle named Trumpet from her aunt, who was an opera star. Ella is rehearsing for a talent show and becomes frustrated because every time she tries to sing Trumpet keeps joining in and howling. It so happens that Sarah Brightman is one of Ella's most favorite singers. I liked the message in the book that while people might consider her weird for not liking popular singers like Rihanna and Miley Cyrus, there is nothing wrong with loving music that isn't "mainstream" and you shouldn't change what you enjoy to please others. Not only is this a funny story that teaches good lessons, it also might lead the target audience, most of whom probably haven't heard of Sarah Brightman (or Charlotte Church, who is also mentioned), to discover some beautiful music.

This book was cute and funny. I read it to my children, ages 5 and 8, who had previously listened to a different Pet Trouble book and really liked it. We didn't find this book as funny, but it was still enjoyable. It was a fun, easy read.

An 11 year old girl named Ella gets a new dog named Trumpet, but this dog has a problem. Trumpet barks whenever you sing and everytime Ella starts to sing trumpet would bark. She also had to practice for the talent show.

I loved this book I thought it related to me a lot in some ways like i read it on the fourth day of school and it was her 4th day of school ironic right.

I would recommend this to everyone who loves to laugh and anyone who loves to read and really enjoys books.

The series Pet Trouble, Loudest Beagle on the Block by T.T Sutherland is an okay book. It had its ups and downs. The bad parts where that there where some confusing parts that I had to read out loud to understand, so that made it take a little longer to read the book. The good parts was that it was about an underdog and that just makes the book a lot better. It is also about a beagle and every thing that the beagle does is what a beagle will actually do.

This book is about a middle school girl who has no friends. The only thing that she really cares about is her music. Or that is what she thought until she got her new dog from her great-aunt. Her great-aunt died and she gave her a dog. The dog is adorable, but her family is definitely not prepared for it. When Ella, the girl, starts to practice her music the dog starts barking. That means Ella can't practice. If she doesn't practice than how is she supposed to win the talent show coming up. To see if she does get to participate in the talent show read the book.

I recomend this bookfor kids who like a good book but don't like long books. If you like reading books that show how an underdog shows that she can be more than an underdog nobody, then this is a book for you. Even if you don't like either of those types of books it is okay because you can still like it.

My favorite part was when finally ella became friends with her dog and her dog was kept. the problem with trumpet was she always howled when ella sang. then when she got all tired out or was still playing, trumpet didn't howl. the worst part was when ella's mother was about to sell trumpet to someone else who knows how to train and take care of a dog. my favorite character was trumpet, because she was cute, and at the talent show, helped them to win. there was no worst character in this book because at the end ella's mother said yes to keeping trumpet instead of giving her away. this book was mostly about ella's family inheriting a beagle named trumpet. trumpet howled each time she sang, so she could only practice at school or at lessons. the talent show at the school was coming up, and ella didn't get much practice, so her mother wanted to give trumpet away. when ella finally told her friends they came over and played trumpet out, then she could practice when trumpet was around. her friends gave her a great idea for the talent show, so she did it. it included 3 people, plus a special guest, trumpet. they ended up winning the talent show, and ella's family keeping trumpet. Auryn 11 years old, 50 minutes into new year!

Jan says

When Ella inherits her great-aunt's beagle, Trumpet, she has mixed feelings about the dog's high-energy, face-licking greetings. It was nice to have someone always so incredibly happy to see her, but Trumpet was so wiggly! The big trouble, though, came at music practice. As a serious voice student, Ella practiced singing every day after school, and again after dinner. The trouble was that Trumpet thought she was a singer, too, and every time Ella sang, Trumpet howled. The louder Ella sang, the louder Trumpet howled. How could Ella practice?

It may be hard for kids in general to identify with Ella's vocal talents, but there are good themes of working hard for a goal, and the value of friends to help you achieve your goals. With a girl protagonist, girls are the more likely readers, but Trumpet is hilarious, lively entertainment if a boy reads the book.

This is the second book in a series of adventuresome dog books -- some more girlie than others. (See my reviews - Runaway Retriever (Pet Trouble), Mud-Puddle Poodle (Pet Trouble), Bulldog Won't Budge (Pet Trouble).) It is not necessary to read Runaway Retriever first, but it is fun if you do, because this book references the same kids and a few of the same events. Great for ages 9-12.
