Dolly says

One of the first books we got for our girls and it's been read dozens of times. They still haven't outgrown it completely at the ages of 3 and 5! I'm pretty impressed by how well the book has lasted throughout the years.

Finn Pennekamp says

Some of these baby animals are very cute and soft. Some of the tactile experiences aren't that different from the cardboard book. Like the elephant ear. It doesn't feel different than the page. I'm just saying...

But... the baby animals are cute. And I like that.

Mia Morrison says

Not badly written with choice being given and - of course - various textures being given for infantile discernment.

Evelyn Matias says

This book is great for beginning to learn about baby animals. All children begin to learn well before they are in the classroom and this is a step in the right direction. Children also learn to understand different things/objects from textiles and since you can feel the animals on this book it helps them to associate what a bunny feels like or a puppy, or a monkey. They are able to see it and feel it using there senses and understanding what the word means.

Kimbely Fletcher says

Great touch and feel book. This book not only teaches about baby animals, but also allows them too feel different textures.

Cute

Dawn says

From almost day one the boys have loved to touch the animals in this book.

K.c. Buell says

A lot of the textures felt exactly the same. Kind of boring.

Heidi says

All of the DK Publishing books we've read are great! I love that this one has pictures of real animals and a different fun texture to feel on every page.

Gavin says

No plot to this one whatsoever. It's made for the very little ones, who aren't likely to understand the words, much less the complexity of an actual plot. Each page introduces a new animal, along with a line of text encouraging the youngster to "touch and feel" the textured surface. We've been reading this book to Gavin since before he turned one, and while he hasn't shown much interest in it lately, he seemed to enjoy this book when he was younger. My only complaint is that I wish there were more variety to the textures. Most of them are variations on "furry," and only the baby elephant, with its leathery ears, seemed truly unique. Even so, there were subtle differences in the nature of the "furs", and I suppose there's something to be said for introducing young children to the nuances in life.

This is my son's favorite book currently (he's 10 months old). We bought it because I remember my niece having it maybe 7 years ago. It has a baby bunny, duckling, elephant, calf, and gorilla to pet. It keeps my son quiet during church.

Shawna Vanhoorik says

Great book for sensory learning. This would also be a great book for children in special education that have sensory problems. The pictures are great and call out to be touched. Book is suitable for babies and up.

Elke Ursin says

Cute! Ady especially loved the monkey. :)

Marmee Zen says

My aged 2.5 child and my aged 9.5 month child both enjoy this book. It only features five different animals but most of them have such different textures that the differences are clear with such a small selection. The toddler is still drawn to it occasionally because the textures pieces feel so interesting.
