Rachel says

I like the idea of making some trendy pieces instead of spending money on a passing fad, but there wasn't much in this book that I would actually wear. Like a ruffled collar made of coffee filters? or a necklace of protractors and paper clips? hmm....I think I'll pass. Plus I'm pretty sure the stuff would fall apart as I was wearing it.

I thought some of the bangles were cute though, and the fringed scarf made of a t-shirt. You'd have to be a real DIYer to appreciate this book.

Kerrie says

A lot of the finished projects didn't really appeal to me, but the techniques used are clearly shown and easily adapted for a finished product that I would like. Fun book that encourages its readers to use their imaginations to upcycle, update, and re-do using items that we have collecting dust in our closets, jewelry boxes, and unused craft supplies.

While several of Domesek's ideas are both cute and creative, many of them aren't made to last. A headband made with drink umbrellas, a neck ruffle made from coffee filters, a belt made from tape and ribbon don't seem like items that could handle more than one wearing.

I guess that I'm more of a "purist" when it comes to my crafting. If I'm going to put an effort into doing something, I like to get some use out of it. That said, there are still some fun projects in this book, but I would recommend picking it up at the library instead of buying it.

I thought the projects in this book were gorgeous and creative, and I really like how the layout of the book mirrors the blog it stemmed from. The only problem was, despite the awesomeness of the projects, I didn't actually want to try any of them.

Some of the projects are ridiculous. However, some of them are attractive. It's much different from other craft book. The works are so cool that they may fit even professional models. They don't look like handmade and I learned how to get what I want but so expensive.

I don't know what I was expecting, but this wasn't it. The blog that the author writes is occasionally referenced on the craft blog I read almost daily, so I thought I would find projects I would want to do. But this is all fashion couture. I would never wear anything I saw in the book, and I wouldn't even want to try to make any of it. Just not for me.

This book is great--simple quick ideas for those days you want to make something, but don't want to start A PROJECT. I made the leather-like boot covers, the blinged-up shoes, and the lace cuff (except I used leftover faux leather from the boot covers instead of lace) and intend to make a couple more things, like the triangle ruler necklace and the painted jeans. I do wish the author had included some basic estimation of amounts for materials needed on some of the projects; FYI, for the shoes, if you have a decent-sized heel, you need at least over 3 yards of rhinestone-y stuff(I didn't buy enough, and I didn't buy real rhinestone strand--that stuff is expensive! I substituted a rhinestone trim I found at Hobby Lobby in the sewing section. It was cheaper, but came in black or white only--no gold). In short, I loved this book, and if you like quirky, quick DIY projects, this is for you! If you want to check out the kinds of things this book covered, the author does a blog at <http://psimadethis.com/>.

Some over the top stuff that I would never make, like gold spray painted shoes, earrings made from champagne corks, etc. But there are a couple of good ideas that I might make, or at least adapt to something a bit different.

Laura says

Really disappointing. I saw Erica on Craft Wars and thought her book sounded interesting. Most of her crafts are ridiculously impractical and tacky!

Emily says

I was hoping to see a step by step guide to making your own patterns for clothes. However, I bought this book without digging into what it was about, so it's all good. I love how innovative the ideas are, and I'm excited to make my own quirky jewelry.

Most of these projects are completely unwearable, as the judges panel would say on Project Runway. Some of them wouldn't even survive one wearing (uhm, ruffled neckline made out of toilet paper). And most everything is just completely not my style, but even if I wouldn't wear it and it's not terribly practical, there are some creative ideas in here. More than the actual execution of any specific project, the strength of this book is in the way it tries to teach you to think about creating accessories / clothing. Starting with a mood/idea board for each project, and using some interesting methods and materials. A number of the projects are more embellishment than construction. I won't make anything from this book, but it will probably stay in the back of my mind. The nautical striped tshirt was one of my favorite projects, along with the tuxedo leggings (much to my own surprise). The list of projects I didn't like was too long to list.

Tracey says

adult nonfiction; non-sewing craft/fashion. Only a very few of these projects are actually wearable; most of it just looks like something a tweenager might make (yes, these ruffles on my shirt are actually coffee filters. And they're hot-glued on.). Skip the book and just browse the author's blog instead if you're needing some inspiration.

Beka says

Though I'm not inclined to make any of the projects in this book, I still really enjoyed it. I like the author's easy writing style and inventive way of recreating what she likes from the fashion world.

Mortalform says

interesting, like the inspirational collage and full color step by step pictures favorite projects

- Bow belt
- Denim messenger purse
- *-fringe scarf
- hippie headband
- sailor shirt
- *-ruffle tank

good list of interesting websites

also available on the website so why buy the book

Fun book! Creative ideas, though some are a little nonfunctional. I liked the pictures and bought the visuals gave nice simplified directions for the projects. I especially enjoyed her inspiration pages for each idea and the fringed scarf idea.
