Zoe and the Edge says

I think this novella captures the grieving process that is still happening for Marguerite. How awkward it is to love someone that is dead but alive. I like that this little story builds on the romance and it's an important part of the relationship. Again, Paul's melodramatic love confessions fell short for me, but, hey, he's adorable.

hmmmm, I think it was meant to be cute but I felt really awkward throughout that date.. I wouldn't want to be in Marguerite's shoes because that date was really bad, as for Paul and his confession I guess it was ok .. not enjoyable

1.) A Thousand Pieces of You ★★★★★

Stacee says

Absolutely adorable. I think I could read these two forever.

Morelia (Strandedinbooks) says

"The magnetism between us -- that, too, remains the same in every world, with every Paul."

I'm not crying, YOU'RE crying.

Norah Una Sumner says

"Paul looks like he'd rather just go home and make out in the kitchen; I would agree, except that I know my Dad is likely to be in there with his laptop, listening to the Beatles music as he catches up on all the Facebook "in memoriam" posts in his honor. Total mood-killer"

I don't remember Marguerite being so hilarious in the first book. You are developing as a character my precious child. Also, Paul is my baby. I will protect him at all costs.

Simona Bartolotta says

"You stared at the counter with this expression on your face, and I realized you were watching the shadows from the window."

It's hatefully short, criminally sappy and disgustingly cloying, it doesn't provide the slightest insight into the characters, nothing -nothing- happens and I can't name a single rational reason why you should read this. But it made my heart melt like a damn burning candle.

"I could kiss him. I could swoon."

So, who cares what your brain -or mine- tells you? Go read it. Right here, right now.

Emer says

"And I realised you were ... awake. You were awake when almost everyone else in the world was asleep. You were alive to what was happening around you, everything, not just the big and dramatic things, but something as small as the shadow of a leaf... You noticed things that were delicate or small, the things nobody would ever notice – all those moments that will never come again."

This was super short and super sweet. Nothing really happened except my heart just turned to mush!!!! NAWWWWW heart eyes

THEY MAKE SUCH A CUTE COUPLE!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Okay I think I might know what team I am now....

Four lovey-dovey stars

"He would love every version of me, everywhere."

Silvy Herondale says

Speravo fosse un po' più lunga, ma è molto carina -

Alexandria says3/5 stars

This is a really short, but cute ficlet. It's not absolutely necessary to read (it's just a "fun extra"), but I still somewhat enjoyed reading their conversation. Meg and Paul are trying to make things work, but there are still some awkward things they have to overcome. I'm looking forward to seeing where their relationship will go from here!

This scene is so sweet and cute ???
I can't wait for the second book!

ambsreads says

MY HEART. I WANT TO CRY. I LOVE PAUL AND MARGUERITE SO MUCH I CANT TAKE IT.
I NEED MORE AND I NEED THEM TO BE HAPPY.

Tiff at Mostly YA Lit says

I NEED BOOK 2.

Sharon says

Awwww. This was short and sweet. I love Paul and Marguerite~~~ <3
