Pamela Tucker says

These types of series I bought and studied from the 76 to 80, most of the other books I have to confess I borrowed from the library, but they were worth having.

I have bought some of the same books I use to borrow, I love J. Vernon McGee and I have a few out of this series I wanted for my personal bible study for something I was working on at the moment.

Most of what I learned came from attending many churches of different denominations in my life. The Professors who wrote the Sunday School guides were similar to the Commentary series by different authors. I can not remember all of them, but they kept me strong in the Lord. So if I failed and had my human side to deal with...these study commentaries put me back into what was reality.

I remember he was one of my old time favorite radio teachers and I would listen to him and others of course, but I really adored his love and the I still can hear his voice in my memory. He was a unique man, and spoke as if Jesus was sitting right next to him. He always spoke like it was something I just needed to know about Him, Jesus that is. He had an anecdotal style and a very lively approach and this made him enjoyable to listen to.
