Borrowed. Still not crazy about anthologies, but wanted to give Fern Michaels a second chance. The best in this one, in my opinion, was the story by Deborah Bedford, about a woman suffering from amnesia.

I didn't bother with Fern Michaels' or Janet Dailey's stories. I haven't liked anything written by them despite numerous tries, so no point.

I tried Sharon Sala's story as I've enjoyed her before, but this book shows its age (copyright 1997). The "he punishes her with a kiss" is an ick button for me.

Tried Deborah Bedford's story, got bored and skipped to the end to solve the mystery.

This is an anthology of four short novels ... and all entertaining. The first is Fern Michaels' The Journey ...my favorite about a wilderness camp and two people who find each other again. Janet Dailey's Heading Home is a western romance with the two main characters crossing horns - but eventually finding a way past each others' defenses. Sharon Sala's story Heading Home is of a rodeo star who comes back home to the girl he once loved ... and Deborah Bedford's 's Rockabye Inn was my favorite of all ... of a woman who loses her memory and comes back to the inn she owns, trying to find her past and her self ... only to fall into a great, suspenseful mystery! Even the side characters in this Bedford novella are rich and memorable. A great anthology to show "you can come home again."

Ray says

This is a quick collection of short stories. Nice to read on the couch after dinner.

Pat Baratta says

Another book of short stories by different authors.

Hpreeder says

Well, I get that this was a bunch of short stories. This, however, felt like a bunch of long stories that got cut off and had to be turned into "and they lived happily ever after" into 5 pages. It felt like half a book. Couple was fighting for 100 pages. Changed their mind andDecided to get married in 8 pages. Fluffy brainless reading, but a bit too much.

Did not finish it. To shallow....They were a series of short stories.

Sometimes I am just in the mood for an anthology, this one was good. Nice and sweet stories to make me smile on a sunday.

In Heading Home by Janet Dailey, the author has given us the story of returning home after a disastrous love affair to find that part of her family land now belongs to a stranger. She always was drawn to this particular piece of land. Leave it to a dog to bring together the woman and the stranger. The story is quite interesting. In The Journey by Fern Michaels, we find a woman working at a sort of survival training camp which is financially in trouble. Help comes in the form of her would be groom who jilted her at the altar. Of course, the woman knows nothing about this as it wasn't her who made the appeal for his help. This story deals with how she came to be working at this camp, what happened it the time that she and her would be groom have been apart and what happens when he shows up at the camp. The Return of Walker Lee by Dinah McCall tells the story of a young man turned away by his one true love returning after many years. Once again we see the growth of the couple as they lived apart but never forgetting the other. Sometimes the truth hurts but finding out what really happened sets the couple on the right path in finding each other. Rockabye Inn by Deborah Bedford in an interesting tale of lost memory and finding the right person to love.

The Journey is a pretty good book. I've enjoyed reading it and would read it again. I really enjoyed all the characters and their personalities. Way to go Maggie and Matt. I really like Lulu and her spunk too. This is a great cuddle-up/rainy day/passing the time book. Heading Home was good too. I liked the characters and the dogs. :) Yay Trooper! I liked Kate's sense of rightness and self-honesty. This was a good cuddle-up story too. The Return of Walker Lee was really good. I liked the slaps, lol. This one had some good humor, but some touching and emotional parts. I really enjoyed reading about Walker and Carrie. Babe was a great character addition too. Rockabye Inn was a very good story. It had emotions, growing, self-discovery, and a true long-lasting love that stretched over time and circumstances. The end was truely touching and had me sniffing like a babe, not really but close. This is a cuddle-up romance with true depth, and I will definitely remember it. I would read this again. Overall the book was great and had a varied touch of emotions. It had a little of everything and I enjoyed all the stories. Enjoy!

This rating is only based on reading 1 of the 4 stories.

The Return of Walker Lee by Sharon Sala - Loved it!

Fedora says

Two and a half stars.

The Journey by Fern Michaels

Heading Home by Janet Dailey

The Return of Walker Lee by Sharon Sala--three and a half stars.

Rockabye Inn by Debora Bedford

These are from 1997, and most do feel a bit dated. Several stories include dogs and other animals, in case that makes these more appealing :)
