Noura Noman says

My very first full Arabic novel in many years. I was catapulted into a different ancient world from page one. Gone were modern amenities and civilization as a whole. This is gritty stuff and it doesn't apologize for it. I loved the unlikely hero Orhan and the conflicting sides of him. He's supposed to be educated and as close to a scientist as one would find in that day and age, yet he also harbored superstitions and misgivings about new ideas. I was also quite grateful to AlFagih for trying to get the reader to see things from different perspective; too long have we allowed our young generation to think there is only one faith and one way of living. Yes, the book contains a lot of violence; but then that's why it's called horror.
