Early Sunday Morning is the first offering from Denene Millner Books, the new children's line published under Agate's Bolden imprint in partnership with Denene Millner, the noted parenting authority, editor, and New York Times bestselling author.

Love and family. These are the things that a little girl finds most special about Sunday mornings. Early Sunday Morning follows June, Mommy, Daddy, and brother Troy through their weekend routine as June prepares for a special performance leading the children's choir at church on Sunday morning.

Readers spend the weekend with June as she collects helpful pieces of advice on how to be less nervous about her big solo. Along the way, she visits the barbershop with Mommy and Troy, gets her hair done by Mommy, receives a special dress from her aunt, and shares her family ritual of getting ready for Sunday morning service. As her special moment approaches, June leans on the support of her whole family, as well as advice from her father, to conquer her fear of singing in front of the congregation.

Early Sunday Morning is a heartwarming celebration of the special time a young girl and her family share together as she learns how to lift her mighty voice.

This was an amazing picture book. I've been trying to be intentional about bringing more books into the home with a diverse cast of characters. This one was recommended in a Facebook group and the cover artwork drew me in so we grabbed it at the library.

It has become a quick favorite! I don't think I've ever read a book that was so affirming of a family loving God and going to church regularly with such sweetness and real earnestness. This was just a story about a regular little girl being nervous about singing but the backdrop was incredibly rich. So happy I picked this one up!

This is a delightful book! The story of a young girl who is nervous about her solo coming up with the church choir. The most wonderful part of this story is the glimpse into the everyday life of a young black girl, her neighborhood, her loving family, and their church community. When we talk about #WeNeedDiverseBooks & #ownvoices stories, I think this type of book is exactly what is meant. This would be a fantastic picture book to share in classrooms with a universal theme that most kids will be able to relate to. This is the epitome of a mirror & window books.

Very nice story of a little girl singing a solo in church for the first time, and the feelings that go with it. Illustrations were very nice.

This book is so endearing. As soon as I finished reading it, my thought was "What little girl can I share this with?" It is a story that all children can enjoy, but I know there are a lot of "regular" black children in "regular" families who will feel sparks of recognition in this tale about a little girl who is going to be singing her first solo in the youth choir next Sunday.

Before the day comes she experiences jitters, faces teasing classmates at school, and receives words of advice from members of her family and community. (When her brother, Troy, is getting his hair cut by Mr. Harvey, the barber tells her "See, what you have to do is pretend everyone in the audience has a big ol' watermelon head. You'll be too busy laughing to be scared.") On the big day it looks like her father may have to miss her performance because he's had to work double shifts at work.

Vanessa Brantley-Newton's illustrations are perfect and lively - one of my favorites shows the bottoms of the little girl's bare feet (-which brought back memories from my own childhood when a white playmate was impressed to find that the palms of my hands and soles of my feet weren't brown like the outsides.)

Dena (Batch of Books) says

A young girl will be singing in the choir on Sunday, but she's nervous. With a little help and love from her family, she gets control of her nerves and delivers a wonderful performance.

This sweet book is a lovely addition to the world of children's religious books. It celebrates family, love, faith, and music. It's the perfect read for Sunday mornings!
