Partisan S. Andrew Swann

This sequel to Profiteer returns readers to the 24th century universe at a time when humans have built a star spanning Confederacy that encompasses 84 worlds minus one--Bakunin. Now the Confederacy wants control of Bakunin. But Dominic Magnus has spent years building his own corporate empire there, and he and his allies intend to hold on to what they've built.

Cathy says

About the same as the first. Again, it kept my attention more than I expected it to. This one expanded on the big interplanetary conflict being fought out on the one unaligned planet in the systems. It's solid sci-fi with lots of political and economic philosophy not deeply hidden within the text.

Bookbrow says

This series grows on you.
