Natalija says

Accidentally the Sheikh's Wife is the first book in the "Jewels of the Desert" duet set in a fictional Persian Gulf country called Quishari. Sheikhs Rashid and Khalid are twin brothers who work in a family oil business.

Rashid is the oldest twin by seven minutes. He is handsome, rich and dedicates all his time to running the company.

All in all this was a nice read & I enjoyed the setting, but I wasn't convinced by the love story between Rashid and the tall, blond Texan Bethanne. The main heroine at times seemed very childish, although I can easily understand her excitement about suddenly being placed among wealthy people and enjoying a lavish lifestyle.

My main complaint is about 2 plot lines. I wasn't sure if this book was about Bethanne replacing Rashid's runaway bride or her search for her father and clearing his name.

Hank is a thief? As I started reading this book, I was no that is just too ready an answer. I was like self this dude died doing something in secret for the sheikh and once the sheikh learned of the plan crash he had a heart attack and died. I just couldn't figure out what he could have been doing. And lo and behold, sheikh had a secret daughter....WOW! Hank and the secret daughter die in a freak sandstorm, which caused the sheikh's heart attack due to being upset that his daughter died. Again, WOW!

Ultimate beach book. You'd have to read it to understand what I'm talking about. Not sure how I ended up with it but lying on the beach, it was about as romantic/harlequiney as I can read. Fun every once in a while.

Not as bad as I was worried it was going to be. Full review here: http://fadedhat.blogspot.com/2012/01/...

I found this book on my kindle so decided to give it a try. To be honest it was not that great. Very cliched story. You know the type, a girl pretends to be in a relation with a rich guy falls for him and he falls for her, everyone is happy, the end. This literally is the whole story.

A good thing about this book is that the main female lead is a pilot. She flies around the world in a private plane.

The romance part was also very dry. Especially from the part of the male lead, he seemed just too distant.

This book was very boring. The writing was juvenile and the word choice was stilted. The romance was luke warm, there was no passion or love. No love scenes either. The heroine was flighty and dreamy to the point of annoyance, while the hero didn't really seem to care very much about her one way or the other.

Basically, save your time and money and skip this one because the romance was about as exciting as watching paint dry.

it didn't keep me interested for long... and it was confusing. Doesn't a sheikh have a palace ?? especially if he is the ruling sheikh? I was confused sometimes if he was even that...the details were not so detailed

I mean, it wasn't terrible; it more or less made sense, and some of the scenes were set well. The whole plot/characterization was a bit undercooked but... it could've been worse.

I quite enjoyed the couple hours I spent on this book. Totally unbelievable old school style fairy tale with a "pauper" girl searching for her father who goes missing while in the service of a fictional Gulf kingdom. The mystery was good and had a satisfying resolution.

The romance rang false and I didn't think the heroine acted her age (rather much older). It's worth it for the mystery though.

This book is about to the level you would expect for a monthly Harlequin romance. The declaration of love seems a bit sudden but that might be because even though the reader recognizes the characters are falling in love it seems more so because this is a romance novel than anything actually happening between them in the story.

Harlequin romance.

I needed to read a quick & easy romance book during a weekend getaway. This book met those needs.

Bethanne Sanders is a pilot for Starcraft. She is delivering one of its planes to the new owner: Sheik Rashid al Harum in the country of Quishari in the Mid East. She had to make one stop in Morocco to pick up Rashid's new bride and deliver her to Quishari as well. Problem is that the new bride escaped from the plane. The arranged marriage was important to Rashid in a business deal he was working on. He requested Bethanne to step into the make believe role as his "special friend" until the deal was signed. She agreed only because she wanted to look for her father who was missing & presumed dead in Quishari.

Needless to say, she falls in love with Rashid and he falls in love with her but doesn't want the relationship to go any further. Apparently, Bethanne's father was a pilot for the Sheik's father and stole one of the planes. Bethanne doesn't buy that story.

This is a Harlequin romance so you know how it ends. Love conquers all.

Sweet book that I easily read while sitting on the beach.
