Cindy ☆? Savage Queen ? says

Is space opera its own mini-genre now? Because I feel like I've been seeing the term a lot more lately.

Namera [The Literary Invertebrate] says

There's been such an influx of space fiction lately! Mirage (technically anyway, though NOTHING happens in space there and I still feel let down), Ignite the Stars...

Peter Tillman says

"Valerie Valdes is taking aim at lovers of space adventure with the crew of La Sirena Negra, and I absolutely got sucked into the action (and humor) that makes this one of the most fun debuts we have in 2019. Did I mention there are space cats?" – comment from Executive Editor David Pomerico

"In space, no one can hear you cagando en la mierda.

Captain Eva Innocente and the crew of La Sirena Negra cruise the galaxy delivering small cargo for smaller profits. When her sister Mari is kidnapped by The Fridge, a shadowy agency that holds people hostage in cryostasis, Eva struggles through one unpleasant, dangerous mission after another to pay the ransom debt. To make things worse, she's stuck with a hold full of psychic cats, a fish-faced emperor wants her dead for rejecting his advances, and her ship's sweet engineer is giving her a pesky case of feelings. Qué jodienda.

Chilling Effect, humorous science fiction that parodies pop culture and video games, is complete at 115,000 words but has series potential. My fiction is published in Nightmare Magazine and She Walks in Shadows, and I am a graduate of the Viable Paradise workshop." -- the author's query letter. It worked.
