‘It was only a bridge’ Doug and his parents thought after they witnessed a dreadful suicide on the bridge. Imagine how the 15-years-old Doug felt, seeing the unspeakable of a head being detached from a body and rolled from the road and ended on his feet. The dead man opens his eye as if to make sure that Doug was the last things he saw before he was gone. Then as days go by he soon realise he was not gone and the your nightmares has just begin.

Dreams turn to nightmares and nightmares turns to hallucinations for the poor Doug. Series of events started happening that made Doug and people around him started questioning his state of mind. His hallucination might be real? Who knows? Doug’s kept his ordeal away from his stubborn parents who dismiss anything supernatural. Unable to get support from his parents he turns to his friend Krista, Thompson and Mick. He told them about his nightmares and with their support he got better. He was back being the old Doug and having fun with his friends and day-dreaming about his sexy English teacher. Then, it did n’t take few days for Doug to realise this was not the end.

‘It was not only a bridge’ Doug soon discovered. When things started sparing out of control, his mother could no longer turn a blind eye and she soon started believing. As, Doug’s dad continue to disbelief his son, Doug and his mother race in time to find answers of what really happen on the bridge. But would it be too late when the truth is uncover?

Sibila Vargas says

I simple appreciate the moral of the story. It an interesting plot, when you carefully reflect about it. Some unanswered puzzles such as, what was exactly in the mysterious black briefcase? Maybe, the author should have elaborated more on this. There are other few bits that could have been expanded.

Jake Duncan D says

The book is just interesting like the first book I read from this author. It about relationship between father and son. The son is a spoilt boy just as you will expect from an only son. He cries like a girl mostime which make me laugh out loud. The boy's dad Norman, hated his child acting like a girl. He was not allow to cry and his dad just want him to be macho which is so impossible when a teenage boy is face with problem he cannot solve. Some scenes are so funny, where the boy and his two silly friends make up series of scenarios why the man killed himself on the bridge.

Here a funny quote "The bicycle was left right there in silent hope of theft, but truthfully no self-respecting thief would want to acquire such an antique torture device."

Really!! there are self-respecting thieves? Where? US or in UK?
