A summary of the book from my sister:

A girl was coming home from school; she was holding an envelope in her hand and wanting to show her grandma. When her grandma read it, she said "You are invited to a fall ball." So Orange Princess jumped around, looking so excited. That night, when she was eating dinner, she asked her grandma if her grandma was going to be for the fall ball. She turned out to be a princess. She wore a half- Korean and half-American gown. It looked so pretty that at the ball, her friends said that they loved her dress. When it was time to go home, Orange princess lost one of her shoes. Her friend Ashley said it was like when Cinderella lost her slipper.

Jocelyn Santana says

It was very princess like.

I like this book because her grandmother was really nice and she made a dress for Kristina for the Halloween ball. Her brother went to and brought a scary mask. At first she didn't like the dress, but then she and her grandmother made a new dress.

Orange Princess Has a Ball is about a young girl named Kristina Kim that was excited about a school "Fall Ball". When her Grandmother told her that she would sew her a dress that Kristina designed, she couldn't wait until the ball. But unfortunately, when Kristina saw the dress her Grandmother made, it didn't look anything like the princess dress she designed. She was upset and didn't want to go anymore. But her Grandmother tried to explain to her that the dress is a princess dress, just a Korean one. They talked it out and ended up meshing the one Kristina drew up and the Korean dress and when Kristina wore it to the ball everyone loved it, and she even lost her shoe at the end of the night just like Cinderella. I really enjoyed this book. I thought it was so cool how the author incorporated the title into the book by printing the text onto orange colored paper. I know that any little girl who loves princesses would absolutely love the fact that there are orange pages and everything that the Kristina has is orange. For example, her bedroom is decorated in orange, she has an orange dress, and even the balloons and streamers she picked out were orange. I know if a younger girl's favorite princess wore purple or pink all the time then they would think it is so cool how everything Kristina owned was orange. I think that this would be a good transitional book for a third or fourth grader. I think that the story itself is just a fun little story about a princess, that still has some hardships throughout the way. She had this big picture in her head of what she wanted her dress to look like but ended up loving the fact that her Grandmother put some Korean princess details into the dress too. This shows young girls to not always have their mind set on one thing, have an open mind because you might not know what you are missing out on. I really like that they incorporated culture into this book by making her Grandmother Korean and incorporating that into her princess dress.

Of all the books I've read in this series so far, this one has the most to offer. There are many layers to the plot, so much more than about finding the perfect dress, but about family and culture and how all that sometimes collides. Good messages on honesty and on being true to yourself. And lots of orange!

This was a good book, and one I would recommend for your young reader. I think she's my favorite "princess" so far. :)

My 3 year old sat through this entire book and repeatedly asked for the princess story told by Grandma Soo early in the book. We will be reading the rest of the series.

It was an ok read. Not one the kiddo wanted to read again. The series has princesses who have different fav colors. Even thr pages match their fav color.

jacky says

Perhaps the strongest in the series, the main character has a complex problem. Unlike the other protagonists in the series looking to win awards, overcome bossiness to save trees, pick a pet, or deal with not getting the lead in the play, this girl has a real issue to sort out regarding her identity.
