Steve Lindahl says

Five Christmas Plays: With Joy Inside is a collection of sweet, evangelical plays, perfect for a church youth group production during a Christmas holiday season. All the plays are suitable for audiences with children.

Three have casts of about ten (one of those has a chorus that could be larger) and two have casts of six. This should provide enough roles for the young people in most groups. The sets are places such as middle class living rooms, a library, a mountain cabin, and a Christmas tree lot. They could be designed in simple ways and would still work well.

Each play has an individual message suitable for discussion groups after the shows. They all share the same overall message that bringing God into your life makes it better. There are adult situations in a couple of the plays, but Winters chooses to show his characters capacity to forgive, rather than dwelling on their anger or resentment.

It was a super fast read of five great christmas plays. I loved that the plays do not focus on the commercialized side of christmas but actually on God.

I received this Book through the giveaway, it's been a while since I've read it and I found it in my book pile again just now and remembered to review it !! Sorry it took so long . Anyway the book came with a great authors signing which made it that much more special :) Its a great little book with Christmas plays, I like the last one in the book the best , it's also good for re-enacting the plays for kids or just for fun around Christmas time. It's not the usual genre I read in books but around Christmas time I like to read some Christmassy books. And this was just right .
